

Moldovan PM meets representatives of the U.S. International Development Finance Corporation, to discuss new investment opportunities

Prime Minister Alexandru Munteanu today had a meeting with Conor Coleman, Investment Director of the U.S. International Development Finance Corporation (DFC) – a key partner in mobilizing strategic investments with regional impact.

The discussions focused on opportunities to attract American investments in projects for the economic development, energy security and regional connectivity of Moldova.

The PM emphasized that Moldova aimed to switch from a model based predominantly on assistance to one centered on investments, trade and projects with sustainable economic impact: “Moldova provides an increasingly predictable environment for strategic investors and we are working continuously to become a safe platform for investments, including in the context of Ukraine’s reconstruction.”

Among the priority sectors for investment, there are infrastructure and energy, with an emphasis on strengthening energy resilience, diversifying sources and integration into regional markets. The sides discussed also opportunities in the fields of digitalization, logistics and manufacturing.

The prime minister appreciated the constant support of the United States for Moldova and reiterated the government’s interest in identifying and implementing new investment projects with national and regional impact. “A stable and resilient Moldova contributes directly to regional security and to the development of opportunities for the entire region,” underlined Prime Minister Munteanu.
