The goal of the online event was to summarize the progress made over the last decade and discuss the future prospects of the "integrated OSCE" approach to preventing violent conflicts and building sustainable peace. It was also a good opportunity to exchange views and good practices on resolving conflicts through the gender dimension.

In her speech, the acting Deputy Prime Minister described the evolution of peace and security processes in the Republic of Moldova from the perspective of implementing the UN Resolution 1325 and the National Action Plan for 2018-2021. She highlighted the opportunities and prospects for integrating the gender dimension into these processes and the importance of promoting universal values related to prevention, involvement in conflict resolution and supporting post-conflict rehabilitation activities.
